If you're interested in trying watercolour painting on canvas, there are a few things you need to know. First, you'll need to choose the right type of canvas. Not all canvases are created equal, so it's important to find one that is specifically designed for watercolour painting.

Once you have your canvas, you'll need to prepare it for painting. This involves gessoing the canvas, which will create a smooth, even surface for your paint to adhere to.

When you're ready to start painting, you'll need to use a different technique than you would if you were painting on paper. Watercolours on canvas need to be applied more thinly, and you'll need to build up the layers of paint gradually.

With a little practice, you'll be able to create beautiful watercolour paintings on canvas. Here are a few tips to help you get started:

- Use a light touch when applying paint. Watercolours are very transparent, so it's important to avoid overloading your brush.
