The yacht Hrvatska Cigra is a 112-foot (34-meter) ketch that was built in Croatia in 2003. The yacht is owned by Croatian businessman Hrvoje Bevanda, who has a passion for sailing and adventure.

The yacht's crew consisted of Bevanda, his wife Ivana, and six other crew members. The crew sailed the yacht from the Arctic to Antarctica in just over four months.

The journey began in the Arctic, where the yacht sailed through the Northwest Passage. The Northwest Passage is a sea route that connects the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans through the Arctic Ocean. The passage is known for its treacherous waters and icebergs.

The yacht Hrvatska Cigra sailed through the Northwest Passage without any major problems. The crew encountered some icebergs, but they were able to avoid them safely.

After sailing through the Northwest Passage, the yacht Hrvatska Cigra sailed south to Antarctica. The yacht sailed along the coast of Antarctica for several weeks, and the crew visited several penguin colonies.

The yacht Hrvatska Cigra then sailed north to South America. The yacht sailed along the coast of South America for several months, and the crew visited several countries, including Chile, Argentina, and Brazil.

The yacht Hrvatska Cigra then sailed across the Atlantic Ocean to Africa. The yacht sailed along the coast of Africa for several months, and the crew visited several countries, including South Africa, Namibia, and Angola.

The yacht Hrvatska Cigra then sailed back to Europe. The yacht sailed through the Mediterranean Sea and the Adriatic Sea, and the crew visited several countries, including Italy, Croatia, and Slovenia.

The yacht Hrvatska Cigra's journey from the Arctic to Antarctica was an incredible achievement. The journey took the yacht and her crew through some of the most challenging and beautiful waters on the planet.

The yacht Hrvatska Cigra is now back in Croatia, where she is being refitted for her next adventure.
